

CONFIDE CARES: SALVATION ARMY

The Confide team has had a busy year of charitable giving. Recently, some of our team shopped for clothing, shoes, and toys destined for children from a local Angel Tree.

According to The Salvation Army's website, "The Angel Tree program puts new clothes and toys under the tree for a million children (each year) who usually go without Christmas gifts. Anonymous donors adopt these little "angels" in an expanding Christmas tradition that makes the season more rewarding for the gift giver and happier for the receiver."

We were also able to donate canned goods to our local food bank. If you are looking for a way to give back all year round, contacting a local food bank to see what their needs are is a great way to get involved.

According to The Salvation Army's website, "Many families don't know where their next meal will come from. Whether the cause is a natural disaster, financial strain, or a pandemic, many families in need struggle to find nutritional food on a regular basis." – Salvation Army
